Belkin launches first hands-free FM transmitter for the iPhone

Look, no hands
The TuneBase FM lets you take hands-free calls in your car

There are plenty of FM transmitters for the iPod, but Belkin's new TuneBase FM with Hands Free is specifically designed for use with the iPhone. As well as allowing you to play your iPhone music through a car stereo system, the TuneBase FM also has a hands-free option that fades out music when you receive a call and then plays the call over the car stereo. This means you don't need to take your hands off the steering wheel while you're talking. The adjustable cradle also lets you flip the iPhone on its side so that you can view GPS maps more clearly. It costs £69.99.
